

A Guide: Provisional Tax Changes for Non-Standard Balance Dates

Your Balance Date: 31 July

What is happening?

On 1 September 2016 we made some changes to how non-standard balance date taxpayers pay provisional tax. Previously, your provisional tax assessment was paid over four quarters within a calendar year. For example – first instalment due 20 March, second instalment due 20 June, third instalment due 20 September and fourth instalment due 20 December.

This has now changed. Your provisional tax instalments line up with your income tax year. The standard quarterly due dates remain the same (e.g. 20 March, 20 June, 20 September and 20 December) but their order has changed. Instead of your first instalment being due 20 March, it will be due on the first quarterly instalment due date after your income year starts.

An example for an July balance date taxpayer

Your first instalment in future will be due on 20 September each year and your final instalment will be due on 20 June. An example of this is demonstrated in the table below for the 2016 Income Tax Year:

Balance Date	Income Tax Year	Instalment 1	Instalment 2	Instalment 3	Instalment 4
31 July 2017	2017	20 September 2016	20 December 2016	20 March 2017	20 June 2017

Transitional Year

The 2016 calendar year is a transitional year. This is the year the changes will take place. You will still pay the same number of provisional tax instalments in the 2016 calendar year, however, two quarters (20 March 2016 and 20 June 2016) will be credited to your 2016 income tax year and the remaining two quarters (20 September 2016 and 20 December 2016) will be credited to your 2017 income tax year.

Your 2016 Income Tax Year

This change means your provisional tax instalments that were due on:

- 20 March 2016, and
- 20 June 2016,

will be credited to your 2016 income tax year.

These instalments will reduce your end of year income tax payable for the 2016 income tax year. This is two less instalments than are normally credited.

Your 2017 Income Tax Year

For the 2017 income tax year, you will be back to paying the standard four provisional tax instalments (as shown in the table above).
